LIBRARIES

LIBRARIES, DEVELOPMENT AND THE UN2030 AGENDA

Rationale by IFLA of why libraries can drive progress on the UN SDGs:

Access to information empowers people to:

- Exercise their civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights
- Learn and apply new skills
- Make decisions and being part of an active and committed civil society
- Develop community-based solutions to development challenges.
- Ensure accountability, transparency, good governance and empowerment.
- Measure progress on public and private commitments in the field of sustainable development.

Access and Opportunity for All: How Libraries contribute to the United Nations 2030 Agenda

Act now to make sure libraries are included in your country's national development plans for the SDGs!!

The inclusion of libraries and access to information in national and regional development plans will contribute to meeting the global United Nations 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

In support of this goal, IFLA has published a booklet of examples and recommendations for policymakers demonstrating the contribution of libraries to the UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). There is also a supporting two-page handout.

The booklet includes stories from all types of libraries in many countries around the world. IFLA thanks all IFLA members and partners that contributed their stories for the booklet. Additional stories will be made

Final Recommendations

1. Don't start from scratch

It helps libraries look at why they should care about the SDGs and how they can connect the work they already do to the goals.

Sustainability initiatives exist in pretty much every library, often thanks to the great work of already dedicated staff.

2. Incorporate the SDGs into your library's strategic plan

Showcasing that at least one of the library's goals is addressing sustainable development sends a message to your politicians, staff, your community, and other stakeholders, that you want to be measured and judged on them.

3. Advocate for the SDGs also outside the library

This can be as simple as sharing information on the SDGs and sustainable development, or involve a major investment, such as converting the library to solar power!

It can be important that libraries look for ways to help their institutions and communities identify, celebrate and champion relevant SDG-related research strengths and activities.

For example, libraries can guide users to SDG content via channels such as LibGuides, create bespoke, curated collections related to SDGs, and cultivate SDG literacy by developing educational programs that advance literacy in all key SDG areas.

4. Showcase how libraries can add value

Most funders are interested in the kind of outcome that has real world implications and is sustainable, disseminated and preserved. Libraries do that, in fact, they are exceptionally good at it. If they set themselves up for accomplishing the sustainable development issues, then funders might increasingly look to the library as one of their essential partners.

5. Provision and promotion of content that is related to the SDGs

Libraries are fantastic sources of information, may it be books, journals, data collections – and of course the librarians themselves. Guide users to SDG content!!!

6. Promote open access (OA) and open educational resources (OERs)

Libraries can help to incentivize open science practices among researchers and citizens and invest in capacity building and human capital. Libraries can also tag SDG content The UNESCO Recommendation on Open Science contains some useful tips.

7. Support of the teaching and research agendas

This is one of the strongest ways that libraries can impact the SDGs and options range from advocating for community outreach and diversity, equity and inclusion (DEI) as part of tenure discussions, to mainstreaming these concepts by integrating them into the community.

8. Make use of existing resources and support

Identify, review and re-use the work of the library associations addressing the SDGs, e.g. by IFLA, EBLIDA or national library associations
